Beautiful Beechwood.

The show this week at Beechwood is a good one in every particular and made good the Management's promise of the best show of the season. Ed. Pauiter as "Happy Hooligan" has a monologue that has a laugh in every word of it. Mr. Pauiter will appear at The Washington the coming season as star of the big "Happy Hooligan" Company. The illustrated song is a "coo one" and a good one, too. The "Crotty Trio," billed as a vaudeville feature act, is certainly all they claim. Joe is an excellent step dancer; Allie has a good baritone voice and Jeanette is about the best wooden shoe dancer that has appeared at Beechwood this season. You can't go wrong in seeing the show this week. It is worth five times the admission and the Casino should be crowded every night. The Kinodrome Pictures are up to their usual standard.

The White School Fund the past month received $541.50, and the Colored Fund $22.50; total, $564.

The following permits were granted—

Robert Harris, to erect a one-story frame house to residence in Main street, Sixth Ward.

M. J. Kenny, to build a vault in rear of lot in Third street, Sixth Ward.

Lewis Cobb, to erect a water closet on lot in Vine street, Sixth Ward.

John T. Parker, to rebuild livery stable in Sutton street, Second Ward.

The Maysville Water Company presented a bill of $96 for water in construction of Market street sewer and brick streets. Referred to Water Committee to report back to Council.

G. W. Rogers & Co. were granted the privilege of removing from their present location to the East side of Market between Second and Third under their present license.

The Mayor was authorized to buy of Samuel Middleman his lot on Second street extension for the sum of $700, the same to be used as a city lot.

The Washington Fire Company through Charles H. Frank, Chairman of the Standing Committee, asked to have the following requisition filled—one shanty siamese coupling, two 2-inch rubber branch pipes with 1½-inch nozzle, six reducers from 2 to 2½ inches and six spacers. Referred to Fire Committee with power to act.

Hon. W. H. Wadsworth was heard in behalf of the C. and O. Railway Company. The request was made that the ordinance of 1888 permitting a rate of speed of only six miles an hour through the corporate limits be rescinded and in its stead an ordinance allowing 18 miles for passenger trains and from 12 to 15 miles for freight trains be enacted. Referred to Railroad and Turnpike Committee, with Mayor and City Attorney added.

Member Short protested against the acceptance of the minutes as read on account of the $33 allowed the Board of Trade for free carriage. He was upheld in his position by the City Attorney, who read pages of law in regard to the matter. A yea and nay vote being taken, the minutes were approved by a decisive vote of 8 to 4 against. The matter of not allowing the $33 came again in a different form, but was again defeated by the same vote, the $33 still holding good.

The Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee was authorized to borrow $2,900—$1,300 to liquidate interest due on city bonds and $1,510 for current expenses.

The United States Government submitted an ordinance to be adopted in regard to the construction of a sewer leading from the Federal Building to Limestone creek. Referred to Laws and Ordinance Committee.

The American Tobacco Company requested that an arc light be placed at the corner of Union street and Forest avenue. Referred to Light Committee.

The City Attorney was instructed to draw up an ordinance in regard to junk establishments, raising the present license of $10 to $50 per year.

It was ordered that plans, specifications and probable cost for grading and paving both sides of Plum street from Third to Fourth streets be submitted to Council by the City Engineer.

A voluminous report in regard to pavements already ordered by ordinance was read and adopted.

A communication from Engineer Hord was read in regard to the dilatory manner in which work was progressing and the non-compliance with the specifications by the contractors in regard to the construction of the brick streets, and suggested that unless more energy was put forth and a strict compliance with the specifications be adhered to, that the agreement between the city and present contractors be declared void, and the work be again advertised for bidders.

Mr. Henkel in his own behalf spoke at length.

He instigated that the Committee and Engineer impeded the work in various ways and that under present conditions he could not complete the work only in great monetary loss. All of which was strenuously refuted by the Committee, in so far as the Committee was instrumental in retarding the work.

A bill in favor of the contractors, amounting to nearly about $14,000, was presented, on the basis of work done and material on hand—14% less than claimed. The Committee thought otherwise, as well did Council, and instead of $14,000 they were allowed $4,141.17.

Mr. Henkel's manner and what he said impressed some as though he were tired of the job, and had he received the first amount asked for he would have thrown up the contract as soon as he had received the money.

Ordinances authorizing the sale of the Brick Street bonds was read.

Adjourned.

been preserved. The interview was inexpressively affective, reminding one of the closing scene between Hamlet and Laertes. Barron proposed that they should shake hands before they met in heaven, for he supposed they would both die immediately. Decatur said he had never been his enemy, that he freely forgave him his death though he could not forgive those who had stimulated him to seek his life. It is reported that Barron then exclaimed: "Would to God you had said this much yesterday! Their last interview was a friendly one, and they parted in peace. Decatur knew he was to die, and his only sorrow was that he had not died in the service of his country.

Decatur and Barron were borne to Washington, the former expiring at 11 o'clock the same night at his home on Lafayette Square and Barron, after a month's confinement, recovered and went to his home at Hampton, Va.

The death of Stephen Decatur is one of the saddest pages of American history and it caused widespread gloom throughout the land.

While the old dueling ground has been the scene of so many tragedies, history fails to record the numerous sham or comedy duels pulled off there, one of which at least is worthy of relating:

Dick Johnson, one of Washington's clever young bloods, was chosen as the victim by several of his companions who were great on a practical joke when they were not the brutes. A "difficulty" was arranged to occur between Johnson and one of the "gang," and after Johnson had been duly "insulted," he was prevailed upon to challenge the other fellow to fight a duel. Bindensburg, of course, was selected as the spot, pistols the weapons, the distance fifteen feet and the time 8 o'clock in the morning. The "preliminaries" were all carefully arranged and the deadly weapons loaded with powder only. The parties repaired to the ground and the principals stood facing each other with pistols raised and pointed directly at each man. All the party were almost bursting with laughter except "Mr. Johnson," who was all but scared out of his wits, and was trembling like Joe Jefferson in the duel scene in "The Rivals." As the word was given and both men fired, one of the party threw a weighted sponge soaked in carbine at Johnson, striking him on the breast and bespattering him with what appeared to be blood.

He fell to the ground with a terrible groan and laid there writhing in "blood" as he thought, and imploring his friends to do something for him. While Dick lay there "dying," his antagonist walked up and down before him with his arms folded across his breast as brave as Napoleon, and as much as to say to Dick, "Do you want any more?"

Dick was asked where he was wounded, and he declared that a great hole was blown through his breast and that he was bleeding to death.

The chief joker then said: "Dick, have you any dying request to make?"

"Yes," he replied, with tears rolling down his cheeks, "take me home to Washington. I want to see mother before I die."

The rascals now saw that they were carrying their joke too far, and they all stepped back from the "dying" Dick, and, with a loud laugh, said:

"Old boy, it's all a joke. You are not even scratched. The pistols were loaded only with powder, and it was only a sham duel gotten up to have some fun out of you. Come, let's go back to the city!"

When poor Dick found out that he was not mortally wounded and that the affair was a put-up job on him, he was furious, and there would have been something doing sure enough if the jokers had not hurriedly left the field of honor and hastened out of reach of the rocks the now arched Dick threw at them.

The novelist, Dickens, sarcastically and truthfully remarked that it was wonderful how cool and collected the seconds in a duel always were. The seconds seemed to enjoy seeing their best friend shot down, and afterwards with great sang-froid, boasted their own gallantry in these murders, resulting from a barbarous custom.

We remember when we were a very small kid the duel fought on the Fishing Shore below Dover about 1865, when W. T. Casto of Maysville was killed by Colonel Metcalf. The day before the duel we saw Mr. Casto in the moon field at Dover, practicing shooting with a rifle. He could hardly hit a barn door, while Metcalf was a crack shot. He killed Casto at the first fire and was never touched himself.

Although Henry Clay was opposed to the barbarous practice of dueling, he felt in honor bound to fight two duels. The first was fought with General Humphrey Marshall at Frankfort, Ky., in December, 1808. Mr. Clay slightly wounded Marshall by his first shot. They again fired at each other and Mr. Clay this time received a very slight flesh wound in the leg. The seconds now interfered and prevented a continuance of the combat.

John Randolph of Roanoke, in one of his fiery and frenzied speeches in the U. S. Senate, attacked Mr. Clay and grossly insulted him. A hostile meeting ensued between them at Bladensburg, or nearby, on April 8th, 1826. They fired twice at each other but neither of them was hit. Mr. Clay and Mr. Randolph were soon reconciled and were good friends up to the time of Randolph's death in 1833. The last interview between these men occurred March 2d, 1833. Mr. R. was on his way to Philadelphia, where he died. He came in the Senate Chamber at Washington while that body was in session by candle light and Mr. Clay was then speaking on the Compromise Act. "Help me up," he said to his half-brother, Benjamin Tucker, "I have come here to hear that voice once more before I die." At the conclusion of Senator Clay's remarks he went to Mr. Randolph and they cordially shook hands. Randolph was an intellectual prodigy, but one of the most eccentric characters in history. He was six feet tall and was as thin as a rail. He was a wealthy Virginia planter, and once at a horse race in New York he rose in his stirrups on the horse he was riding and yelled: "I will bet a crop of negroes that horse wins!"

When the bill to suppress dueling in the District of Columbia came before the Senate in 1833, Mr. Clay said no man would be happier than he to see the whole barbarous system forever eradicated. "I owe it to the community to say that whatever I may have heretofore done, or by inevitable circumstances might be forced to do, no man holds in deeper abhorrence than I do that pernicious practice, condemned as it must be by the judgment and philosophy, to say nothing of religion, of every thinking man.

The man with a high sense of honor, and a nice sensibility, when the question is whether he shall fight or have the finger of scorn pointed at him, is unable to resist, and few, very few, are found willing to adopt such an alternative.

When public opinion shall be renovated and chastened by reason, religion and humanity, the practice of dueling will at once be discontinued."

And so it was. But is not the good old custom of dueling superior to the modern practice of whipping out a pistol and slaying your alleged enemy without form, or surgeon, or benefit of the clergy? Remember what Kipling says—

"Until we are built like angels,

With hammer and chisel and pen

Forever and ever! Amen."

But Master Rudyard doesn't say a word about "rifles and pistols and swords," the real deadly paraphernalia of a bora fighter. He might have also included "typewriter" with his "hammer and chisel and pen." But this is "another question" and will likely be eternally settled—

"When the Rudysards cease from Kipping

And the flaggards ride no more."

The little old town of Bladensburg is a curiosity in the village line. It is situated on the Eastern branch of the Potomac, a mere creek, but which goes on a tear several times a year and gives the town a good washdog and a duckling. In 1814 when the British troops burned and sacked Washington City, the American forces met them at the old Bladensburg bridge and quite a tight tool place. The buildings used as hospitals for the wounded and dying soldiers are, many of them, still standing in the town of Bladensburg, and they are unique curiosities in themselves. The George Washington Hotel, a two-story brick structure, bears the date of 1732, the year Washington was born. It has a steep gable roof and is two stories high. It is now run on the wide-open order, with a beer saloon as the main attraction. There were fifty darkies in the saloon and the yard attached, nearly all drunk and having a big time on July Fourth. General Washington used to frequently stop at this old hostelry, hence it was named in his honor.

The old Lee House is another landmark. It was erected in 1746, and the bricks are as good as new. The house is the typical two stories with small windows and doors. It is not named after the famous Lee of Virginia, but takes its name from a colored man named Lee, who purchased it years ago at Sheriff's sale. Then there is an old frame building built in 1742, and also occupied now as a hotel and called the Poli House. Situated on the Eastern outskirts of the town is the old Dr. Stevens mansion, once one of the most imposing old style homes in Maryland. On its gables are wooden figures showing that it was erected in 1847. It is a large brick house strongly built, with several acres of old-time terraced grounds surrounding it. Colonel James H. Kyer, a wealthy Colorado mine owner, now resides in and owns it. He is completely overhauling the mansion and grounds and is to make a modern home of it. Its situation on a sloping hill is very fine. Bladensburg has some very nice homes, but its general aspect is something like Washington, Ky., and colored people form one-half the population. It has five saloons, and everybody around there seems to have a throat on him that requires irrigating with beer and divers other kinds of booze. The numerous barrooms are also well patronized by the white sports of Washington, and the five beer gardens do a big business in the summer time. Hyattsville, a pretentious town of 3,500, is only a half mile from old Bladensburg, and as the former is a "dry" town the saloons of the latter reap a harvest all the year round. Bladensburg is in Prince George county, Md. The town was laid out in 1712, and is therefore over 161 years old, and it looks it.

Bladensburg is the queerest little town we ever saw, and it has got Washington, Ky., skinned a block except in number of darkies and in the fine art of "boot-legging" mean whisky.
